

England trip 2025 - Day 10 - May 21st

Exploring Exeter: Cathedral Tales and Tongue Twisters

Have you ever been to Exeter? No? We have! And we would really recommend it because of its magnificent cathedral and its quite interesting old town.

But first things first: In our morning class, we got the task to create a product for the "Dragon's Den". Maybe you know it from German television? It's called "Höhle der Löwen". The ideas were all very futuristic and some of them really impressive.

After the first lesson Leo and Mr Shepherd went to the police station to pick up the wallet Leo had lost on the way to the bus station a few days ago. Someone had found it and handed it in to the police. In our opinion he's a real hero.

After school our trip to Exeter finally began. On the way to Exeter we listened to some really nice music on the bus. (Everyone could request a song that was then played out loud in the bus.)

The bus dropped us off near the famous cathedral and after we had arrived at, we had some time to hang out in the park and get some lunch. Then our guided tour began, which was very interesting, and we learned a lot about Exeter's history, for example why it was bombed by the Germans in the second world war. But did you know that the cathedral itself is almost 1,000 years old? That is hugely impressive.

After the great tour we got some free time to explore the city a bit more, but of course with a few tasks on top. For example we had to teach a British person a difficult german word and the person had to teach us a difficult English word or a tongue twister. Follow the QR code for one of the funny results.

At around 5 pm we made our way back home after another great day.
