

England trip 2025 - Day 12 - May 23rd

Classroom or cavern, that is not the question - we can do both!

Today was already our last school day of the trip. One group talked about food, while the other group played games like "One Truth, Two Lies". At quarter past twelve, we all gathered downstairs in the garden, where every student received a Certificate of Attendance.

Afterwards, we walked down to the harbour and had a 30-minute break to buy lunch. With full stomachs, we continued on to Kents Cavern, a cave that's around 400 million years old. It was once inhabited by Neanderthals and early humans, and even used by Ice Age animals. Some of the prehistoric finds there are over 450,000 years old. The cave's stalactites were especially impressive.

After the tour, we could either go shopping for the last time in Torquay or relax in a park near the sea until 6 o'clock. Then our driver Olaf picked us up and we safely returned to our host families.
